Thanks to Peter Weighill for digging out an early advert for the game, it is confirmed that this was intended to be the "Circus of Fear" Inspector Gadget game eventually released by Melbourne House. So this version you see here was cancelled, and another team clearly brought in to create a whole new game around the story/theme. But why?

The 1980s and early '90s were the best time line. Don't roll your eyes — your argument is irrelevant. But I'd add one more show to that list the original Saved By the Bell. It's cheesy. It's campy.
It's catchy. It's fun.

Inspector Gadget is the protagonist of the two live-action Disney films of the same name. He is a cyborg who frequently bumbles during his cases and gets into danger, but he always gets out of trouble through either his trusty gadgets, the unseen assistance of his niece, Penny, or pure luck. He was formerly John Brown, a normal shy security guard who became a cyborg after Dr. Brenda Bradford ...

A new CGI-animated Inspector Gadget TV series has been in development since at least the start of 2012, possibly earlier. It was commissioned by Teletoon Canada, which will air the show, and put into preproduction by The Cookie Jar Company. In January 2012, the in-development show was mentioned by Ray Sharma, the CEO of XMG Studio, which produced the hit mobile game "Inspector Gadget: M.A.D. Dash".
