Since the M.2 SSD interface is part of the SATA 3.2 specification, it includes other features beyond the interface. This includes a new feature called DevSleep. As more systems are designed to go into a sleep mode when closed or turned off, rather than power down completely, there is a constant draw on the battery to keep some data active for quick recovery when the device is woken up.

How the M.2 SSD Will Make Your PC Even Faster

Cluster analysis is used in many disciplines to group objects according to a defined measure of distance. Numerous algorithms exist, some based on the analysis of the local density of data points, and others on predefined probability distributions. Rodriguez and Laio devised a method in which the cluster centers are recognized as local density maxima that are far away from any points of higher ...
